ADDRESS,

3c. 3c.

TO MY FELLOW CITIZENS OF DUBLIN.

I THANK you for paft favours; I have found in you a kind and a gracious Mafter—you have found in me an unprofitable fervant; under that imprefinion I beg to affure you, that fo long as the prefent flate of Reprefentation in the Commons Houfe continues, fo long muft I refpectfully decline the honour of foliciting at your hands a feat in that Affembly.

On this principle it was I withdrew from Parliament, together with those with whom I act, and I now exercise my privilege, and discharge my duty in communicating with my Constituents, at the eve of a General Election, fome fay an immediate Dissolution, when I am to render back a trust, which, until Parliament shall be reformed, I do not aspire to re-assume. The account of the most material parts of my conduct, together with the reason of my resolution, will be the subject of this Letter.

When I fpeak of my conduct, I mean that adopted in common, and in concert with the other Gentlemen. We fhould have felt ourfelves deficient in duty if we had not made one effort before the clofe of the Parliament, for the reftoration of domeftic peace, by the only means by which it feemed attainable, conciliation; and if we had not fubmitted our opinions, however falliable, and our anxieties, however fignificant, on a fubject which in its existence shook your state, and in its confequences must fhake the empire. Our opinion was, that the origin of the evil, the fource of the difcontent, and the parent of the diffurbance, was to be traced to an ill-ftar'd and destructive endeavour, on the part of the Minister of the Crown, to give to the Monarch a power which the Con-Aitution never intended; to render the King in Parliament every thing, and the People nothing, and to work the People completely out of the Houfe of Commons, and in their Place to feat and eftablish the Chief Magistrate absolute and irrefiftible; it appeared to us that a Minifter guil y of fuch a crime, is as much a traitor to the Conflitution as the People would be to the King, if they should advance in arms, and place the leader on the Throne, more guilty of treafon and equity and justice; because in them it wou'd only be rebellion against their creature, the King; but in the other it would be a rebellion against his c eator, the People: it occured to us, that in this count y the offence would be still higher, because in this country, it would be the introduction not only of a defpatic, but of a foreign yoke, and the revival of that gleat question which in 1782 agitated this country, and which, till your Parliament shall be reformed, must agitate this country for ever. We thought no Irifhman-we were fure no honeft Irifhman would ever be in heart with Government, fo long as the Parliament of this country shall be influenced by the · Cabinet of England, and were convinced that the People would not be the more reconciled to a foreign yoke, becaufe re-imposed by the help of their own countrymen, as long as they think it to be the cafe, we were convinced they will hate the Administration, and the Administration will hate them; on this principle we recollected the Parliament in this country pledged their lives and fortunes in 1782, though fome feem to have thought better of it fince, and are ready to pledge their lives and fortunes against this principle. We could not ferioufly believe, that the People of Ireland were ready to refift the legiflative usurpation of the British Parliament, in whole station the greatness of the tyrant would have qualfied the condition of the flave, and that the fame people may proftrate themfelves to the legislative usurpation of another body-a British Cabinet. We recollected to have heard, that the friends of Ministry had lamented that England had not acceded to the American claim of exclusive legislature, and afterward attempted to re-establish British dominion, by influencing the American Affembly. We faw the Minister purfue that very plan toward Ireland which they regretted they had not reforted to in the cafe of America. We need not repeat the particulars, but we faw the refult to be on the mind of the People a deep-rooted and effablished discontent and jealously, and we concived that whatever confpiracies existed in any extent or degree, proceeded from that orginal and parent confpiracy in the Minister to fubvert the Parliamentary Conftitution by the influence of the Crown. It appeared to us, that the difcontent and diffurbance fo created, was greatly increafed by another caufe, the treatment of his Majesty's Catholic subjects.

It is the buincfs of the Minister to observe the changes in the national spirit, as much as the changes of foreign combinations; -- it was the misfortune of our Ministry that they never attended to those changes; they did not perceive that the religious principle and temper, as well as the political, had undergone on the Continent, in America, and in Ireland, a fundamental alteration; that the example of America had had prodigious effect on Europe; the example and doctrine of Europe, had had no effect on America; they did not fee that in confequence of that cause (there were other causes also) the Irish Catholic of 1792 did not bear the singless also) the Irish Catholic of 1692; that the influence of Pope, Priest, and Pretender were at an end.

Other dangers, and other influences might have arifen, new objects, and new paffions; the mind of the People is never flationary, the mind of Courts is often flagnant, but those new dangers were to be provided against in a manner very different from the provisions made against the old.

Indeed, the continuation of the old fyftem of fafety approximated and fecured the new danger; unfortunately our Minifters did not think fo; they thought, they faid, that the Irifh Catholic, notwithstanding the American Revolution, notwithstanding the French Revolution, religious as well as political, was still the bigot of the last centurythat with respect to him the age had flood still---that he was not imprefied with the new fpirit of liberty, but still moped under the old fpirit of bigotry, and ruminated on the triumph of the Crofs, the power of Catholic Hierarchy, the riches of the Catholic Clergy, and the folendour of the Catholic Church .--- You will find the fpeeches of the Catholic opponents, particularly the Ministerial declaimers, dream on in this manner, and you will find from the publications of those speeches, and of the Catholics, that the latter had laid afide their prejudices, but the Minifters had not: and one of the caufes why, those Minifters, alleged, that the Catholic mind had not advanced was, that their own mind had ftood ftill; the State was the bigot, and the People the philosopher.

The progress of the human mind in the course of the laft 25 years has been prodigious in Ireland, I remember when there fcarcely appeared a publication in a newfpaper of any degree of merit which was not traced to fome perfon of note, on the part of Government or the Opposition; but now a multitude of very powerful publications appear from authors entirely unknown, of profound and spirited investigation .--- There was a time when all learning in Europe was confined to the Clergy---it then advanced among the higher orders of the Laity, and now it has gone among the People; and when once the powers of intellect are possessed by the great body of the nation, 'tis madnefs to hope to impose on that nation civil or religious oppression, particularly in those whose understandings have been flationary, though their power and riches have been progreffive. The politics of the Caftle, with the religious feuds of Ireland, had occupied and engroffed their mind --- The eye of that mind, or intellectual vifion, had become of courfe fubtle indeed, but extremely little; on the other hand, the politics of Europe and America had occupied the mind of the People; and therefore the mind of the People had become comprehenfive --- And when the former complained of the prefs, they complained of the fuperiority of the popular understanding. It appeared to us that the best remedy was to raife the understanding of the great by enlarging the sphere of its actions, viz. Reforming the Parliament.---But-to return.

The Miniftry, however, thought proper to perfift in hoftility to the Catholic body on a falle fuppolition of its bigotry; the confequence of fuch an attempt was, that the great body of the Catholics, I mean that part the moft popular and energetic, difappointed, fufpected, reviled and wearied, united with that great body of the reformers, and formed a Catholic, Prefbyterian, and Proteftant league, for the freedom of the religion, and the free and full reprefentation of the People. Out of this leagua a new political religion arofe, fuperceding in political matter all influence of prieft and parfon, and burying for ever theological difcord in the love of civil and political liberty. This is at prefent in all political matters the Irifh Religion.

What is the Irifh Religion ? Unanimity againft Defpotifm---Viewing the ftate of the country in this light, it appeared to us that the unconftitutional influence of the Crown, and the prefcription of the Catholics, were the fundamental caufes of our difcontent and jealoufy: with those there exifted other difcontents diffinct from these caufes, without these caufes infignificant, but with these caufes creating great agitation and diffurbance. Two remedies occurred---coercion and conciliation: we opposed the former, and we proposed the latter.

I will trouble you with our reafons: we confidered the fyftem of coercion would in the first inftance deftroy the liberty of the People, and in the ficcond inftance, would fubvert the authority and powers of Government. Here I beg to recur to what I have juft obferved on the neceffity for those who administer to a country to advert to the changes that take place in the temper and understanding of the People. Unfortunately the Ministry provided, for the purpose of making the People quiet and contented, a fystem of laws and proclamations, which had they been quiet before would have rendered them diftracted. I need not repeat them---we all know them---we had the barren office of giving a fruitles opposition---we faw a spirit of reform had gone forth --- it had conquered in America --- it had conquered in France; both here and in England it existed, and was chiefly nourished and propagated by the abules of our Government. It appeared to us that the beft way of ftarving that fpirit was to remove its food; far otherwife the propofers of the plan of coercion; they thought it better to feed that fpirit and to cherish the abuf-s and encrease them; they hoped to fortify their Conft.tation against an epidemic diftemper, by preferving uncured the old gouts and rheumatifins, and a hoft of other diforders. The power of limited monarchy was not to te preferved by conflicational pow'r, which is its natural ally; but by defpotic power, which is its natural death and d'folution. Inflead of correcting the abufes of the State, they invented laws which were themfelves an abufe, and proclamations which were an abufe alfo; and which greatly, though filently, propagated the new principle. There are two wavs by which a new principle fpreads; one is by arms, and by marcyrdom the other. The Mahomedan religion was propogated by arms; it pleafed Providence that the Christian religion should have been propagated by the latter. See whether the unfortunate choice of our Ministers has not given to the new principle the bunefit of both: they have fled before it abroad, and they have trampled on it at home, and given it the double recommendation of conquest and martyrdom. This confideration was one of my objections to perfift in the war with France, on account of Brabant, and it is one of my objections to perfift in a war with the Irifh on account of venal boroughs.

Had the Government, inftead of aggravating, reftrained abufes, they would have put the State at the head of a fpirit of Reform, which they could no longer refift, and could only hope to moderate; it was to fuch a policy adopted by Q:een Elizabeth that the Church of England owes principally what it retains of power and fplendour preferved by the Government of the country who took the lead in the Reformation; but ours fell into a different project, they armed cap-a-pee against a fpirit which they could not confine by arms abroad, nor by executions at home, and therefore inftead of being at the head of popular measures, they were at the tail of them in the Catholic question, in the place-bill, in the pension-bill, in every bill of a popular tendency; they refifted at first, they yielded at last, reluctantly and imperfectly, and then opposed, condemned and betrayed the principle of their own acquiescence; they agreed to a place-bill for instance, and then they multipli d places man fold. What is the barbill, or the bill that creates thirty new places for the Gentlemen of the Law? They agreed to the first Catholic bill, and then proscribed the person of the Catholics and oppose his freedom in corporations; they had before agreed to the establishment of the independency of the Irish Parliament, and then had created a multitude of officers to make that independency a name.

It is reported to have been faid by fome of the ministers of England, that his Majefty's reign has been to Ireland a course of conceffions, and it was much a subject of wonder that the people of Ireland should perfist in their diffatisfact on; the answers to those Ministers is obvious, the conceffions were extorted from Ministers by the perfeverance of Opposition, and they were rendered abortive by the treachery of Ministers. The recognition of our Parliamentary Rights has been rendered abortive by unexampled exertions of bribery and corruption; the freedom of our trade by debt and war, and the elective privileges of our Catholics by a course of personal persecution, and corporate influence, and on the whole the benefit of Confti utional laws, by the Administration of an unconflitutional Government. When the Ministers talk of their conceffions to Ireland, do they know the conceffions of Ireland to them ? Do they know the debt of the war ? Continue that rate of expence and the English wars of the next century will have the fame effect as the Englifh prohibition of the laft; they will annihilate the trade of Ireland.

But to return to the Administration. They relapsed into their violence when they recovered from their fears, and their fystem has been therefore occasionally violent and weak, never strong-and uniform. It is an observation of Lord Bacon, that the fall of one of the Roman Emperors was due not to his tyranny nor his relaxation, but to both, and that the fluctuating fystem is ever fatal; it is an obfervation of the fame, that the way to refift the progrefs of a new fect is to correct the abufes of the old ones. Unhappily our Ministers differed from Bacon; their fystem . was faithful to no one principle either of violence or conceffion. We objected that it could not now refort to unqualified violence without incurring all the objections be-. longing to a policy of fubmiffion coupled with a policy of violence, and that it could not hope to obtain the advantages appertaining to either. In purfuit of fuch a fyftem the Ministry feemed to us to have loft not only their difcretion but their temper; they feemed vexed with themfelves for being angry, they feemed to become in a 'paffion with themfelves becaufe they had loft their temper with the people; in its ftruggle with popular rights, the State, like a furious wreftler, loft its breath as well as its dignity, as if an angry father should lofe his temper with his child, in which cafe the old fool is the most incorrigible; in the mean time, the enemy feemed to understand our fituation perfectly well, and relied on our expences for diffolving our credit, and our intemperance for diffolving our authority; and at the very time when we were precipitating on fuch meafures at home we were receiving the most melancholy communications from abroad; we faw the Ministers retreating from the enemy with as rapid a ftep as he advanced upon the poople, going back and back and back, while the Democratic principle in Europe was getting on and on, like a mift at the heels of the countryman, fmall at first and lowly, but foon ascending to the hills, and overcafting the hemisphere. Like the Government we wish to provide against the storm; like the Government we wish to difarm the people; as the best means of fafety we wished to difarm the people, but it was by the only method by which a free people can be difarmed; we wished to difarm the people of their grievances, and then their other arms, their lefs dangerous arms, the bayonet, and even the pike, would be retained for no other use but the use of the Government. A naked man op-prefied by the State is an armed poft. A few decent Rithops fent to the Tower against law produced the Revolution. Mr. Hampden, and the four other innocent perfons arraigned by Charles I. for High Treafon, produced the the civil war; that grey-coated man, or that green-coated man fent on board a Tender, or detained in prifon without a trial, he, too, will have his political confequence. Senfible acts of violence have an epidemic force; they operate by fympathy; they poffeis the air as it were by certain tender influences, and pread the kindred paffion through the whole of the community. No wonder the difficulties have encreafed on the Government! Sad experiment ! to blood the magistracy with the poor man's liberty, and employ the rich like a pack of Government blood-hounds to hunt down the poor! Acts of violence, like these put an end to all law as well as liberty, or the affectation and appearance of either.

In the course of the feffion we asked to what end all this? and accompanied our queftion by flating the enfeebled refources of the country; we had mentioned at the beginning that the debt of the war had been about 5,000,000l. we were told it was an error; I with it had been fo---but, on examination, that fum appeared fomewhat about the debt of the war. And it will appear, if the prefent Loans are filled, that the debt of the war will bear near 8,000,0001. We submitted the effects of the war on the refources of the country, and here again it was faid we were in error; I with we had been fo; but at what intereft does the State borrow money ? an intereft which between man and man would be utury, and nearly double the former rate. We mentioned the ftate of the revenue to have declined; again were we contradicted; but what is the fact ? what bufinefs is now done on the quay? We did not wish to reveal the arcana imperi, we flated nothing more than appeared from the terms proposed in the Gazette, from the returns of your cuftomhouse, and the printed resolutions touching the state of your manufactures; and we stated those public facts, not to damp the public confidence in the defence of the country, but to abate a little of that frantic confidence manifefted in a determination, at the hazard of her fafety, to go on with a fyftem of domeftic coercion, till the Minister fhould conquer the people, and of foreign war till the fame Minister should atchieve another conquist at the risk of general ruin; till he fhould, fword in hand, recover Brabant; that Minister has found it a more profing experiment to defend Cork than to take Flanders, as the Emperor has found it a fafer experiment to abandon Flanders and Italy to fave Vienna, We mentioned those our objections to fuch folly then, and I reap them now, not to damp your zeal against a foreign eneny, but to confine the zeal of Government to one enemy, and to deprecate a fecond enemy---our own people and a civil war added to a foreign one.---Such was the fystem of coercion. To oppofe a remedy is eafy; to propofe one is difficult and anxious; it appeared to us that we fhould fail in duty and in candour, if when we refifted the project of overnment, we did not fubmit a plan of our own, and the only plan that appeared to us to promife peace or profperity was conciliation; we proposed, accordingly, the Emancipation of the Catholics, and a Reforn, in the Commons House of Parliament. To the first it was objected, that fuch a a meafure was irreconcilable with the tafety of the King, or the connexion with England. To the first objection we answered, that the capacities of three-fourths of the people should not be made a perfonal compliment to his Majefty, and that the presence for taking away those capacities fhould not be the religion of his Majefty's allies, of his prefent fubjects of Canada, of his late ful jects of Corfica, of a confiderable part of his fleet, and a great part of his army, that the principles that placed his fami y on the Throne were those of Liberty, and that his Irith fubjects, if not convicted of felony, were entitled to the benefit of those principles, and that the Catholics have in juffice and reason at least as good a right to liberty as his Majesty has to the Crown. We observed that the only impediment to the Catholic claim, as the law now ftands, was the oath requiring the abjuration of the worfhip of the Virgin Mary, and of the real prefence; that to make these points at such time as this, matter of aiarm to the fafety of the King was to give an air of ridicule to the calamities in which those, his Ministers, had involved him. That such opinions, abstracted from foreign politics, it was beyond the right or the power of the State to fettle or punifh; that Kings had no right to enter into the tabernacle of the human mind, and hang up there the images of their own orthodoxy; that the Catholics did not infift on his Majefty to be of their religion, that his Majefty had no right to exact that the Catholics should be of his; that we knew of no royal rule either for religion or mathematics; and indeed the diftance b-tween divine and human nature being infinite, the proportion in that reference between the King and the fubjects is loft, and therefore in matters of rel gion they both are equally dark, and fhould be equally humble; and when Courts or Kings affume a dictation on that fubject, they affume a familiarity with the Almighty, which is excess of blafphemy, as well as of blindnefs. Our contemplation, the most profound on Divine Nature, can only lead us to one great conclution, our own immeafurable inanity, from hence we fhould learn that we can never ferve God but in ferving his creature, and to think we ferve God by a profusion of prayer, when we degrade and proferibe his creature and our fellow-creature, was to suppose Heaven, like the Court of Princes, a region of flattery, and that man can there procure a holy connivance at his inhumanity the perfonal application of luxurious and complimentary devotion. Or if the argument were to defcend from religious to moral fludy, furely, furely Ministers fhould have remembered that the Catholics had contributed greatly to the expences of war, and had bled profulely therein : that they themfelves were much in debt to human nature, and should not lose that one opportunity of paying a very fmall part of it, merely by a reftoration of loyal fubjects to their own inheritance, their liberty. We fuggeited fuch a ftep as a measure of policy as well as justice, with a view to the ftrength of his Majefty, who was most improperly made a bar to fuch a concession. We fuggetted that his fituation with regard to America, to Europe, to h s allies and enemies, was critical, and that it was a mockery of that fituation to suppose that the worship of the Virgin Mary, of the doctrine of real prefence, conflituted any part of the royal difficulties; that there was no fpectre to diftub the royal immagination but all exifting fubfrance—a gigantic form walked the earth at this moment, who fmote Crowns with an hundred hands, and opened for the deduction of their fubjects a hundred arms—Democracy; and we implored Minifters againft fuch an enemy to ally and identify the King with all his people, without diftinction of religion, and not to detach him from any part of them to make a miferable alhiance with Priefferaft, which was a falling caufe, and a fuperannuated folly.

With regard to the danger offered to the connexion with England from the emancipation of the Catholics, we observed that the argument was of a most dangerous and infulting nature, for it amounted to a declaration that the privileges of a vaft portion of a nation fhould be facrificed to another country; that it was not the old eternal question whether the privileges of one part of Ireland fhould be facrificed to the ambition of the other, but whether a vaft defcription of the people of Ireland fhould be facrificed to England; we observed that in this part of the argument we need not recur to justice, we might rely on policy; and we asked, was it the policy of England for the Irish faith to make experiments on allegiance? We did not with to exaggerate, but were justified in making this fuppofition :- Suppose Ireland the feat of Government, and that for the better fecuring the fafety of the King, here refident, and for the connexion of Great Britain with Ireland, that the Irifh fhould incapacitate all the Protestants of England? The fame affection which England, on that supposition, would afford to the Irish, the same affection has the now a right to expect from Ireland. When England had conquered France, poffeffed America, guided the councils of Pruffia, directed Holland, and intimidated Spain; when the was the great weftern oracle to which the nations of the earth repaired, from whence to draw eternal oracles of policy and freedomwhen her root extended from Continent to Continent, and the dew of the two hemispheres watered her branches; then, indeed we allowed with lefs danger, but never with juffice, fhe might have made facrifices of the claims of the Irifh. I do not mean, we did not mean to prefs a fenfe of the change which has taken place in the power of England, further then to prevent further changes more mortifying and deprefive, and to imprefs on Great Britain this important conviction, that as Ireland is neceffary to her, fo is complete and perfect liberty neceffary to Ireland, and that both iflands muft be drawn much clofer to a free Conftitution, that they may be drawn clofer to one another.

The 2d part of our plan of conciliation was the Reform of Parliament. The object of the plan was, to reitore the Houfe of Commons to the people. If the plan do not accomplish that, it is not the idea of the framers; but no plan could fatisfy these perfons who wished to retain the credit of Reformers and the influence of Boroughs---no plan could fatisfy those who complained when any veftige of Borough influence was continued that the Parliament was not reformed, and when the veftiges ware fwept away, that the Conftitution was demolifhed---no plan could fatisfy those who defired that the Boroughs fhould be deftroyed and preferved, and were willing to let the people fit in the House of Commons, provided Ariftocracy fat in their lap. It is in favour of the plan fubmitted, that without any communication whatever with the other fide of the water, it bears a ftrong and close refemblance to the plan proposed in the Parliament of Great Britain, and in that remembrance carries with it a prefumption that it has a foundation in common fenfe and common intereft; the objections to it founded on the prefumed antiquity of the Borough fystem, hardly ventured to make their appearance; examination had fhewn that the greater part of the Irifh Boroughs were creations by the houfe of Stuart for the avowed purpole of modelling and fubverting the Parliamentary Conflitution of Ireland; that these were understated when called abuses in the Conftitution ; that they were gross and monstrous violations, recent and wicked innovations, and the fatal usurpations on the Constitution by Kings whole family loft the Throne for crimes lefs deadly to freedom, and who in their Star Chamber tyranny, in their High Commiffion, in their Ship-money, or in their defpenfing power, did not commit an act fo diabolical in intention, fo mortal in principle, or fö radical fubverfive of the fundamental rights of the realm, as the fabrication of the Court Parliament, and the exclusion of a Conftitutional Commons, and which is a fubverfion, not of the fundamental laws, but of the Conftitutional Lawgiver; you banifh that family for the other acts, and you retain that act by which they have banifhed the Commons.

It was objected with more fuccefs that the conftitution of boroughs, however in theory defective, has worked well in the fact; but it appeared to us that this was an historic error---we stated in answer to that objection, that the birth of the borough inundation was the deftruction of liberty and property, that James I. the King who made that inundation, by that means deftroyed the titles of his Irifh fubjects to their lands, without the leaft ceremony--the robbery of his liberty was immediately followed by the robbery of his property; for rely on it, the King who takes liberty will foon take away property, he will rob the fubject of his liberty by influence, and then he may plunder him of his property by statute. There were at that time, the historian adds, interior grievances; what were they? martial law and extortion by the foldiers, in levying the King's duties; a criminal jurifdiction exercifed by the Caftle chamber, and a judicial power of the Council. Thefe inferior and those superior grievances, amounted to no law at all. How could it happen, fays the hiftorian, that the King could do all this with fo fmall an army, feize the properties of the fubjects, and transport the inhabitant. I will prefume to conjecture --- The King had another inftrument, more fubtle and more pliable than the fword, and against the liberty of the subject, more cold and deadly, a Court inftrument, that murders freedom without the mark of blood, palls itfelf in the covering of the conflitution, and in her own colours, and in her name, plants the dagger, a Borough Parliament. Under this borough system, the reign of James was bad, but the next was worfe; the grievances which England complained of, under Charles the Firft, were committed in Ireland alfo. Those measures, I mean the new Councils--they had been aggravated here by an attempt to confifcate the province of Connaught: there is extant a correfpondence on the fubject of Ireland, between the King and his Deputy, Lord Stafford, of a most criminal and difgufting nature; his Majefty begins by profeffing his general horrors of the Conftitution --- he proceeds to acknowledge his particular injuries to the Irifh; he owned that he had defrauded the Irish of their promised graces, and he expresses his fears that they have a right in justice to afk what it was his interest, as it appeared to be his determination, to refuse. His Deputy---What does he do? exceeds his royal mafter in his zeal against the pretentions of Ireland. A judicious Court fycophant will often flatter the Court of St. James's, by Irish facrifice, whether it is the Constitution, or the fair name of the country. He, the Deputy, had, faid the hiftorian, two great objects --- one was to fleece the people of Ireland, and the other was to cheat them --- to get the money, and to elude the graces. He fucceeded --- why? becaufe there was another, a third instrument, worfe than himfelf --- a borough Parliament --- that borough Parliament met, it voted fix fubfides, and redreffed nothing; this is virtue and public in comparison to what it did utter---after committing these crimes for which the Deputy justy lost his head---after having feized part of the provence of Connaught --- after the inflicting martial law --- menopolies --raifing an army against law---and money to pay that army against law --- after fining and confining against law --the borough Parliament vote that Deputy an extraordinary fupply, and in the preamble of the act they pais on that Deputy and extraordinary panegyric, with fuch a thorough conviction of his iniquity and their own, that they after impeach that very Minister for those very acts, and record a protestation against the record of their panegyric, to give way to the meannels of another borough Parliament, who, on the return of his family, cancels the record of the protestation to reftore the force of the panegyric --- maffacre --- confusion --- civil war --- religious fury followed and of courfe. Here you fee hatched and matured the egg that produced the maffacre, and that brood of mortal confequences.

The principles of right were rooted out of the land by Government, and they were amazed at anarchy --- the barriers against inundation were removed by the Government, and they were aftonished to be overwhelmed by a popular torrent --- the principles of robbery were planted by the deputy, and the Government were furprifed at the growth of popular pillage: had the country been left to a ftate of barbarous nature, she could not have been fo shattered and convulfed as when thus reduced to a flate of barbarous art, where the Government had vitiated that Parliamentary Constitution; it professed to introduce, and had introduced without profeffing it, influence not civilization, had fet one order of the nation in feud against the other, had tainted the gentry with venality (there was bribery in those days as well as violence', and had given them idea of vice, but not days of refinement. I pass over a hundred and thirty years, a horrid vacuum in your hiftory of Borough Parsiaments, fave only as it has been filled with four horrid images in the four-fold profcription of the religion, trade, of the Judicative and Legiflative authority of the country, by the commercial reftrictions of William, the penal laws of William and Anne, and the declaratory act of the 6th of George. And I come to the boundary of the gulph where the Conftitution begins to fir and live in an octennial bill, accompanied, however, with, and corrected by, a court project of new Parliamentary influence and degradation. This project may be called a court plan for reforming borough Parliaments, but reforming them not on popular representation, but of a more complete and perfect, exclusion and banishment of the Commons---the people had begun to form their certain combinations with the oligarchy, and like weeds began to grow a little about the doors and courts of their own Houfes of Parliament, and like weeds it was thought proper to banish them --- and as Government had before reforted to the creation of boroughs to overwhelm the Commons, fo now they reforted to a new hoft of places and penfions to overwhelm the oligarchy. This is the famous half-million, or the experiment of the Caftle, to fecure the dependance of Parliament, and to prevent the formation of an Irifh party against the domination of a British Cabinet. The Court could not then, like the 1st James and the 1ft Charles, command to rife up a new fabric of boroughs like a regal Pandemonium, to conftitute a regal House of Commons; it therefore engendered a young and numerous family of places and penfions, to bribe and to buy, and to fplit and fhatter, and to corrupt the oligarchy. Thus were the people once more excluded from the chance of influence in Parliament, and as it were mouldered from the threshold of their own house by a host of placemen and penfioners, who had left the caufe of the country to follow the fortunes of the ariftocracy, and now left the aristocracy to follow the fortunes of the Court, and then voted new loans and taxes to furnish wages for the double apoftacy. You had now but little to give up, and that little you furrendered; you gave your provision trade by an embargo of 76 to the contractors; and you furrendered by new loans and taxes, your revenues to the Minifter. You accompanied these facrifices with the unvarying felicitations of borough Parliaments, on the virtues of Government, on the great and growing profperity of your country and her commerce, which bring the poor progrefs of the country, your borough hiftory, and that of your Chief Governors, a continuation of rapine, they have been wittily called, to the cataftrophe of 79, which found your State a bankrupt, and your community a beggar, and which induced Parliament to declare that fuch has been the working of your borough fystem, and fuch the fenfe of that Parliament respecting it, that nothing but a free trade could fave the country from impending ruin. I with to fpeak with all honour of the Parliament at that moment, but must recollect the circumstance of that moment. Why did Parliament express itself in that manner at that time, and demand its rights a fhort time after ? becaufe Parliament was at those moments in contact with the people, and it is the object of the Reform that the should continue in contact with the people always, and with the Minister never, except the people should be in contact with him : that Parliament declared that nothing could fave this country from impending ruin except a free trade, but in declaring that it declared much more; it protested against these borough Parliaments of a century, who had acquiefced in the lofs of a free trade; who had fuffered the country to be reduced to that ftate of impending ruin for want of that free trade, and who had beheld the approaches of that ruin with a profusion of thanks, and a regular felicitation on the growing prosperity and flourishing commerce of a ruined country; and that Parliament did, by neceffary interference, declare, to five the country from returning to that flate of ruin, and it was abfolutely neceffary to reform the ftate and model of those borough Parliaments, and therefore is an authority for a popular reprefentation, as well as for a free trade---indeed it not only proclaimed the neceffity, but conftituted it; for in a fhort time after it gave this country a new poli ical fituation, wherein the ceafed to be a province, and became a nation, and of courfe it rendered those borough Parliaments that were adequate to the management of a province, abfurd and inapplicable when that province became a nation. A province must be governed with a view to the interest of another country---a nation with a view to her own interest---a borough Parliament was therefore not only competent to govern a province, but the only kind of Parliament fit for the degradation of fuch a fervice, and for that very reafon it was the most unfit and inadmissible instrument in the government of a nation; for the principle of its birth being in that opposite to the principle of its duty-- the principle of its birth being Court intrigue, which touched and tainted contractors, and the principle of its duty being the defence of the nation against fuch intrigue and fuch contractors the nature of Parliament being opposed to its duty, or its duty to its parent, being in contradiction with its duty to its country---it follows that the nation in fuch a cafe must b- r provincialized, and the independency supposed to have been then obtained at that period, would have been only a transfer of dependency from the Parliament of Great Britain to the Court of St. James's, in covin and in couple with the borough-brokers of Ireland; therefore the independency of your Parliament, and the full and free reprefentation of your people are terms fynonimous and commenfurated.

In opposition to this hiftory and these arguments fubmitted in different shapes to the House, in support of Parliamentary Reform, it was replied, that the borough constitution had worked well at least fince 1782; for before no man will contend for it, and that the country had greatly advanced in commerce and in tillage; and indeed as far as the plowman and the weaver are concerned, too much cannot be faid to justify against every charge of floth, the character of the Irifhman, and to vindicate againft a vulgar error, the native energy of a ftrong, hardy, bold, brave, laborious, warm-hearted, and FAITH-FUL RACE OF MEN. But as far as that boaft goes to political measures, we cannot fo well express our detestation of them as by recital; the propositions, the new taxes without the trade, ths new debt, notwithstanding the new taxes, the fale of the Peerage, the furrender of the East India trade for the re-export trade, the refusal of the re-export trade without fuch barter, the inequality of the channel trade, and the prefent provincial tariff fuffered still to obtain between two countries; 8,000,000l. of a loan voted on account of the war, without commercial compenfation, liberality, or equality; the encreafe of offices, for the profeffed purpofes of procuring a majority; another increase of offices fince the place-bill; the bar-bill, the convention-bill, the gunpowder-bill, the indemnity-bill, the fecond indemnity-bill, the infurrection-bill, the fuspension of the habeas corpus, General Lake's proclamation by order of Government, the approbation afforded to that proclamation, the fublequent proclamation of Government, more military and decifive; the order to the military to act without waiting for the civil power, the imprisonment of the middle order without law, the detaining them in prifon without bringing them to trial, the transporting them without law, burning their houfes, burning their villagescrimes, many of which are public, and many committed, which are concealed by the suppression of a free prefs, by military force; the preventing the legal meetings of counties to petition his Majefty, by orders acknowledged to be given to the military to difperfe them; fubverting the fubject's right to petition; and finally, the introduction of practices not only unknown to law, but unknown to civilized and chriftian countries.

Such has been the working of the borough fystem; nor could fuch measures have taken place but for that fystem. Such practices, however, have in part been defended as acts of power, neceffary to prevent infurrection and punish confpiracy. But it appeared to us that in these practices Government was combating effects, not caufes; and that those practices encrease these causes, and therefore will encrease those effects : that admitting every charge of conpiracy and disaffection in its fulleft extent- -that confpiracy and difaffection are only effects of that great fundamental caufe; that parent confpiracy formed fome years ago, to procure by corruption defpotic power. This is the caufe, and that caufe acts according to the reception of its matter, and the tempers and conflitutions to which it applies; and therefore produces on fome men difloyalty, in fome republicanifm, in fome the fpirit of reform; but in all deep, great, and growing difcontent. That is the caufe and the poifon which has made fome men mad, and all men fick; and though the Government may not be able to reftore reafon to the mad, or loyalty to the republican, yet if they mean to reftore health to the fick, if they mean to reftore content and confidence to all, to most or to any confiderable portion of the people, they muft take away the poifon, they must remove the cause; they must reform the Parliament. They have told us at fometimes, and at other times they have faid the contrary, that it is a fpirit of plunder, not politics, that is abroad; idle talk-whatever be the crime of the prefent fpirit, it is not the crime of theft, if fo, it were eafily put down; no, it is a political, not a predatory fpirit, it is the fpirit of political reformation, carried to different degrees, to liberty, in fome instances, to ambition in others, and to power in others. And even in these cases where charged to be carried to confifcation, it is evident from the charge itfelf that confifcation looks to political vengeance, not private plunder ; and therefore the best way of laying that fpirit, of whatever defigns or intents, is to lay the pre-existing spirit of unlawful power and unconstitutional influence, that has frighted the people from Parliament, and has called to our world that other potent and circumferibed apparition. The way to defend your liberty; and the best method to fecure your house against a Defender is to fecure the Commons House against a Minister. " There was ambition, there " was fedition, there was violence, mixing in the public caufe," faid Lord Chatham to Mr. Flood, in a privateconversation, as he told me, on the civil war between: Charles I. and his People. " There was," faid he, " am-" bition, there was fedition, there was violence, but no. " man will perfuade me that it was not the caufe of liber-" ty on one fide, and tyranny on the other."---So here. there may be confpiracy, there may be republicanifm, there may be a fpirit of plunder mixing in the public caufe, but it is a public caufe, and let no man perfuade you that it is not the caufe of liberty on one fide, and tyranny on the other.

"The hiftorian of these melancholy and alarming times, cenfuring, perhaps, both the Minister and the Opposition, and cenfuring us more for our relaxation, than violence, will, if a candid man, clofe the fad account by obferving, " That on the whole, the caufe of the Irifh diffraction of " 97, was the conduct of the fervants of Government. "-endeavouring to establish, by unlimited bribery, abfo-" lute power, that the fystem of coercion was a neceffary " confequence, and part of the fystem of corruption, and " that the two fystems in their success would have efta-" blifhed a ruthlefs tyranny, tremendous and intolerable, " imposed on the Senate by influence, and the people by " arms." --- Against fuch excess of degradation, against any excels whatfoever, we moved the middle, and as we thought the composing and the falutary measure --- a Reform of Parliament, which should give a Constitution to the People, and the Catholic Emancipation, which fhould give a people to the Conftitution. We supported that measure by the argument herein advanced, and we defended ourfelf by fuch against a deluge of abuse conveyed in the public prints against us on account of that measure, and I restate those arguments, that however the majority of the Houfe of Commons might have deen affected, your underflanding may not be carried away by fuch a torrent of invective. We urged those confiderations, we might have added in our defence the dangers of invalion and infurrection, panics most likely to incline the Minister to concur in fuch a measure, which measure feems to be our best. I might fay, our only defence, against those dangers and those panics; we might have added confiderations of the immenfe expence attendant on the working, as it is called, of the Borough Constitution; which expence may be called the prodigality of misrepresentation, or the huge and gigantic profusion which the people supply for turning themfelves out of Parliament.

It is well known that the price of Boroughs is from 14 to 16000l. and has in the course of not many years increased one third; a proof at once of the extravagance and audacity of this abuf, which thus looks to immortality, and proceeds unawed by the times and uninftructed by example; and in moments which are held alarming, entertains no fear, conceives no panic, and feels no remorfe which prevents the chapman and dealer to go on any rifk with his villainous little barter in the very rockings and frownings of the elements, and makes him tremble indeed at liberty, but not at crimes. " Sufpend the habeas corpus act, take · away the poor man -- fend the Reformer to Newgate ---· imprison the North; but for the trade of Farliament --for the Borough-broker of that trade, don't affect him; ' give him a Gunpowder Act, give him a Convention Bill, give him an Infurrection Bill, give him an Indem-' nity Bill; and having faturated him with the Liberty of ' his Country, give him all the plunder of the State.' Such is the practical language of that great Noun of the Multitude -- the Borough-monger demurring on the troubles of the times, which he himfelf has principally caufed, and lying at the door of a Secretary full of fores and exactions. This fum I speak of --- this 14 or 16000l. must ultimately be paid by you : it is this increase of the price of Boroughs which has produced the increase of the expence of your establishments, and this increase of the expence of your Establishment which has produced this increase for the price of your Boroughs; they operate alternately like caufe and effect, and have within themfelves the double principle of rapid ruin; fo that the People pay their Members as formerly, but pay them more, and pay them for reprefenting others, not themfelves, and give the public purfe full and open to the Minister, and rendering it back empty to the People. Oh unthrifty People! who ever furrendered that invaluable right of paying your own Representatives. Rely on it, the People must be the prey if they are not the paymafters. To this public expence we are to add the monftrous and bankrupt wafte of private property, becoming now fo great that honeft men can't in any number afford to come into Parliament : the expence amounts to a child's portion, and the child must be wronged or the father fold or excluded. Thus, in the Borough Constitution, is private virtue and public fet at variance. and men must renounce the fervice of their country or the interest of their family; from this evil-the loss of private fortune, a much greater lofs is likely hereafter to take place --- the lofs of talent in the public fervice; for this great expence must in the end work out of Parliament all ununftipendiary talent that acts against them. What man of fmall fortune, what man of great fortune can now afford to come into the Houfe of Commons, or fustain the expence of a feat in Parliament or of a contested Election ? And what open place, except in a very few inftances, (the city of Dublin is one of them) where the Electors return without coft to their Reprefentatives? J know fome who have great talents, and have exercifed them in the public fervice, are disposed to decline fituations to the honest individual fo expensive and to the public now fo unprofitable. To this I am to add a greater evil than those already stated --- the expenditure of morals. What shall we fay for the morals of a Country---how many years purch fe would you give for her virtue, whofe Ministry founded its authority on moral depravity, and formed a league and covenant with an oligarchy to transfer for hire, virtually and fubftantially the powers of Legislation to the Cabinet of another Kingdom. We invergh against other co nbinations --- what fort of a combination is this? This, I know not by what name to approach it, fhoots its virus into the very heart and marrow of the higher orders of the Country. ' Make your People honeft,' fays the Court---" Make your Court honeft,' fay the People. It is the higher claffes that introduce corruption :---thieving may be learned from poverty; but corru tion is learned from riches---it is a venal Court that makes a venal Country -that vice defcended from above : the peafant does not go to the caffle for the bribe, but the caffle candidate goes to the peafant; and the caffle candidate offers the bribe to the peafant, becaufe he expects, in a much greater bribe, to be repaid by the Minifter. Thus things go on: 'tis impoffible they can laft. The trade of Padua aent ruins every thing; your Ministers refted their authority entirely on that trade, till now they call in the aid of the military power, to enforce corruption by he fword. The laws did, in my judgment, afford the Crown fufficient power to administer the Country, and preferve the connexion with Great Britain; but our Ministers have despifed the ordinary track --- the plain, obvious, legitimate, and vulgar bonds between the King and the Subject; they have reforted to the GUINEA and the GALLOWS, as to the only true and faithful friends of Government, and try to hang where they can't corrupt. They have extended the venal flipendiary principle to all conftituted authori ies; they have given the taint of the grave Corporator as well as the Senator, and have gone into the halls and ftreet to communicate the evil to the middling and orderly part of the fociety; they have attempted the ind pendency of the bar. I have great objections to the bar-bill, and my objections are great in proportion to my regards for the profession, whole fignal fervices to the caufe of liberty must prove to every man's conviction how valuable the acquifition, and how ineftimable the lofs of that profound and acute profeffion, must be to the cause of a country, such as this was formerly, where the rule of government was the law of the land. We have heard of complaints againft fyftems of diforganization; what is this fyftem? Is not the correption of organized bodies their diffolution? Is not their perverfion worfe than their diffolution? What thall we fay on the attempts of Minifters on Sheriffs, and the appointment of that Magiftrate with a view to Parliamentary influence only, and to the prevention of legal aggregate meetings, and the fupprefiion of the public fentiment? --- Thefe things mult have an end---this diforganization of conflituted authorities by court influence mult have an end.

I am not fuperfitious --- but I know that States, like individuals, are pumified; it is to prevent their punifiment we effaved their reform; tion; they are punified colle lively, and they are punified flowly, but they are punifhed; where the people are generally or univerfally corrupt, the fociety comes to a flate of diffolution; where that corruption is confined to those who administer the country, that power must come to a state of diffelution; but in order to prevent the fociety from partaking of that corruption and confequence of that bankrupt diffolution, it is neceffary that the power that administers the country, fhould be blought speedily and radically to a state of reformation; the best fystems are not immortal; are the worst? Is the trade of Parliament immortal ? Have the best fyftems perifhed ? and fhall this be impaffable and everlafting, infinite in its duration, as it is unbounded in its profligacy. What was the cafe of Carthage---of Rome---and of the Court of France? What is the cafe of the Court of England? Sitting under the ftroke of Juffice for the American War, paying pains and penalties in augmented burdens and diminished glory; that influence which has depreffed her liberty, has deftroyed her energy, and rendered her as unfit to preferve her Empire as her Freedom. As long as the battle was between the Court and Conftitution, the former was perfectly equal to fubdue her own people, but when the was to combat another people, the was unequal to the tafk, and for the very reafon, becaufe fhe had feduced and debafed her own .--- The corruption of the Court has rendered England vincible, and has endued her in her prefent state of national degradation, with an infenfibility of glory, the refult and evidence of mental degeneracy. I remember to have heard Lord Chatham in one of his fpeeches on the Middlefex Election obferve, that in his Ministry the object of the Court of England was the conquest of the French, and that now it was the conqueft of Mr. Wilkes. The purfuing fuch like conquefts as thefe over Mr. Wilkes, has enabled the French to effablifh a conqueft over the English. The King who is advilld to conquer the liberty of his fubjects, prepares those fuljects for a foreign yoke. The Romans were conquered at Canna, first by Varo, and afterwards by Hannibal. The English have been conquered, first by the Minifter, and afterwards by the French. The Romans were finally eonquered by the barbarians of the North, becaufe they had been previously conquered by the Princes of the Empire, and then the half armed favage with the pike and the pole came down on the fiontiers, and disposed of the Mafters of the World as of the flock of the land, the gouty flock of the rich, and the mute flock of the people.

It is now fixty years fince the adoption of the project to supply in corruption what the Chief Magistrate lost in prerogative --- the lofs of thirteen provinces, of 120,000,0001; to lofe these provinces, the loss of our station in Europe, the lofs of 130 millions, to lofe that flation; to place the Crown of England as low in Europe as in America, and to put France at the head of Europe, instead of Great Britain, while her people crouch under a load of debt and taxes, without an empire to confole, or a conflitution to cover them, has been the working of that project; it has worked fo well as to have worked the people out of their liberty, and his Majefty out of his empire; to leave him as little authority in Europe, as his people in Parliament; and to put the King at the feet of France, as the people are put at the feet of the King; public credit has alfo fallen a victim to this fuccefs, its last great conquest after liberty and empire. In this rapid decline no one Minister has been punished, or even questioned; and an empire and a conftitution have been loft without one penal example; and in a war unparalled in expence and difgrace, and attended with the groffeft and rankeft errors, clofing the account of blood with proclamation of infolvency---no murmur from the Parliament of either countries---no murmur! Far from enquiry or complain', confidence has uniformly attended defeat and difhonour. The Minifter's majorities are become as numerous as his difgraces; and fo gigantic has been his encroachments on the independency of the Conffitution, that they can only be matched by the gigantic encroachment of the enemy on the empire. In fhort, fo perfectly do the people appear to be driven out of all footing in the conffitution, that when his Majefty is driven out of almost all footing in Europe, and a queftion is made by the people, whether the Ministers of thefe difgraces and difhonours fhall be difmisfed ? they have their

of all footing in the conftitution, that when his Majefty is driven out of almost all footing in Europe, and a queftion is made by the people, whether the Minifters of these difgraces and difhonours shall be dismissed ? they have their majority at hand to support them. Against this inundation of evil we interpofed Reform; we were convinced of its neceffity, from the confideration of corruption at home; we were confirmed in that conviction from the confideration of revolutions abroad. We faw the regal power of France deftroyed by debts, by expences, and by abufes: We faw the Nobility interpole for those abufes only to encumber the Throne with their ruins, and to add revolution of property to revolution of government; we faw in the American Revolution that a people determined to be free cannot be enflaved; the British Government was not equal to the tafk, even in plentitude of empire, supported by the different Governments of the Provinces, and by the fad apoftacy of the haplefs loyalift; that loyalist is a lesion to the rich and great to stand by their country in all fituations; and that in a contest with a remote Court, the first post of fafety is to stand by the country, the fecond post of fafety is to stand by the country, and the third post of fafety is to ftand by the country; in that American contest we faw that reform, which had been born in England, and banished to America, advances like the Shepherd Lad in Holy Writ, and overthrow Goliah. He returned riding on the wave of the Atlantic, and his fpirit moved on the waters of Europe. The royal ship of France went down-the British man of war labours-your veffel is affected-throw your people overboard, fay your Ministers, and ballast with your abuses ;

throw your abufes over-board, we faid, and ballaft with your people. We recollected thefe Islands were formerly placed in a fea of defpotifin, we faw they were now two Kingdoms in a Republican Ocean, fituated between two great Revolutions, with a certainty of being influenced more or lefs by one or by both. We afked ourflyes was it poffible that the American Revolution could have had such effects on France, and that the American and the French Revolutions would have no effect on these coun-The questions that affect the world are decided on tries. the Theatre of the World The great qu ftion of popular liberty was fought on the great rivers of Europe and America; it remained to moderate what we could not govern; and what method fo fafe to moderate popular power as by limited Monarchy? and what method remains to limit the Monarchy of these kingdoms (it has now no limits), as by reforming Parliament ? What method I fay, to prevent a Revolution but a Reformation ? and what is that Reformation of Parliament but the reftoration to the people of Se'f-legiflation, without which there is no liberty, as without Reformation there is no Self-legiflation? So we reasoned. The Government of a country may be placed in the hands of one man, and that one man may refide in another kingdom, and yet the people may be free and fatisfied; but to have the Legislature of the country, or what is the fame thing, the influencing and directing fpirit of the Legislature placed out of the country, to have not only the King but the Legislature an absentee --- to have not only the head but the heart disposed of in another country. Such a condition may be a difguifed, but is unqualified and perfect, despotifm. Self-legislation is life, and has been fought for as for being. It was that principle that called forth refiftance to the Houfe of Stuart, and baptized with royalty the Houfe of Hanover, when the people flood Sponfors for their allegiance to the liberty of the fubjects: for Kings are but fatellites, and your freedom is the luminary that has called them to the fkies. It was with a view, therefore, to reftore liberty, and with a view alfo to fecure and immortalize royalty, by reftoring to the people felf-legiflation, we proposed Reform ; a principle of attraction about which the King and People would fpin on quietly and infenfiely in regular movements, and in a fuft in comm n to both. ' No---no---the half · million, faid the Minister, that is my principle of ate traction. Among the rich I fend my half million, and I · difpatch my coercion among the people.' His Devil wont fort, --- He deftroyed Liberty and Property --- He confumed the Prefs --- He burned Houfes and Villages --- and he failed.' "Recal your Soldier, we faid, and in his place difs patch our meffenger --- try conciliation, you have declared · you with the People should rebel, to which we answer, God forbid! Rather let them weary the royal ear with · petit ons, and let the Dove be again fent to the King; it may bring back the Olive, and as to you, thou mad · Minister ! who pour in regiment after regiment to dragoon the Irinh, becaule you have forfeited their affections: We befeech, we fupplicate, we admonifh, reconcile the · people; combat Revolucion by Reform; let blood be · your laft experiment.' Combat the Spirit of Democracy by the Spirit of Liberty; the wild Spirit of Democratic Liberty by he regulated Spirit of Organized Liberty, fuch as may be found in a limited Monarchy, with a free Parliament; but how accomplish that but by reforming the present Parliament, whose narrow and contracted formation in both countries excludes popular reprefentation; i.e. excludes f lf-legiflation; i. e. excludes liberty, and whofe fatal compliances the refult of that defictive reprefentation. - have cauled, or countenanced, or fanctioned, or fuffered for a course of years, a succession of measures which have collected upon us fuch an accumulation of calamity, and which have finally at an immense expense, and through a fea of blood. ftranded thefe kingdoms on a folitary fhore, naked of Empire, naked of liberty, and naked of innocence, to ponder on an abyfs which has fwallowed up one part of their fortunes, and yawns for the remainder.

May the Kingly power that forms one effate in our Conftitution continue for ever; but let it be, as it profeffes to be, and is by the principles and laws of these countries it should be-one effate only; and not a power May the Parliamentary Conflictution profper; but let it be an operative, independent, and active part of the Conflictution, advifing, confining, and fometimes directing the Kingly power.

May the Houfe of Commons flourish; but let the People be the fole authors of its existence, as they should be the great object of its care.

May the connexion with Great Britain continue; but let the refult of that connexion be perfect freedom, in the faireft and fulleft fenfe, of all defcriptions of men, without diftinction of religion."

To this purpofe we fpoke; and, fpeaking this to no purpofe, withdrew. It now remains to add this fupplication;---" However it may pleafe the Almighty to difpofe " of Princes, or of Parliaments---MAY THE LIBERTIES " OF THE PEOPLE BE IMMORTAL!

HENRY GRATTAN.
